The Long Running Dispute between Tasima and RTMC to be settled in Constitutional Court

GAUTENG- The Constitutional Court is set to deliver a judgment that will settle the long running labour relations dispute between the Road Traffic Management Corporation and Tasima.

Tasima has launched numerous court actions in an attempt to hold on to the National Traffic Information System after the Constitutional Court ruled in November 2016 that it had to hand over the system to the RTMC.

In the current matter, Tasima has sought to compel the RTMC to pay the salaries of its employees as it believes that the RTMC has taken over its business.

This uncooperative attitude was insisted upon despite the 2016 court ruling which recognized that Tasima had unlawfully captured the state asset, eNatis, and turned a R355 million contract into a R2.5 billion deal.

The company has steadfastly refused to disclose its true financial position to prove that it does not have money to pay the salaries of its employees. Instead it has instituted many law suits; in total of 64 with an expensive entourage of lawyers.

Judgment will be handed down at 10am at the Constitutional Court in Braamfontein. The media is advised that the court will allow only 20 members of the public including the media inside the courtroom.
