SECTION: 2 PROJECT BRIEF AND DESCRIPTION

Project Description	The RTMC is mandated by the RTMC Act, 20 of 1999, to stimulate and Sector	research in road traffic matters and effectively use the resources of existing institutes and research bodies.
	Various research topics need to be aligned into the South African context for it to be applicable to our unique circumstances as well as new topics identified which need to be researched.
	The related road safety service categories which the bidders will be appointed for are:
	Social Research
	Behavioural Research
	• Or other related research/ Value added services e.g. surveys, traffic counting etc.
	The South African road and transport environment is complex and there is a need for an understanding as to how human elements/factors influence and interact with other traffic management functions and activities. Within the road and traffic management discipline the components of the system encompasses the road, road environment and the vehicle, all of which are influenced by human behaviour in one way or another.
	In order to be able to provide input into planning and execution of programmes and activities that aim to make the transport system safer, human factor professionals need to have an overall understanding of the road and traffic management system, its underlying principles, theories and the application of these along with knowledge related to indicators and methods for monitoring and evaluating programmes and interventions.
	As this is a multi-disciplinary approach, the human factor professional need to have multidisciplinary background with experience in projects that include aspects of sociology, education, psychology, civil engineering and ergonomics.
